SYNOPSIS

Having barely begun her career on British television, actress Lena Headey was wooed by American feature directors who were captivated by her emotional realism and timeless beauty. A big fan of British films, Headey maintained a demanding international schedule in more lucrative American fare to finance her love of homegrown period pieces and art house dramas like "Face" (1997) and "Onegin" (1999).

NOTES

▲ PROFILE

- 1 Her name was pronounced "LEE-nah HEE-dee."
- 2 "I want choices, and quite honestly, the choices are only there if you can make yourself financially viable. So I finally thought, If you want to do great movies back in England, you have to somehow create a name for yourself, even in a tiny way." – Headey quoted in Detour magazine, April 1999
- 3 About her feature debut in "Waterland" – "I had to show my boobs, and I was a chubby 17-year-old then. I watch that movie now and I'm like, 'I've got bigger boobs then! What's happened?'" – Headey quoted in Movieline magazine, April 1999
- 4 "Lena has an exceptional quality – she does not know how to be anything but true. I think that once people have seen her in this film she will get the attention she has not yet had. I plan to ride up on her coattails." – director Hans Peter Moland quoted by The London Times, July 13, 2000
